

INTRODUCTION

The current work has as main purpose to analyze using a descriptive methodology both countries, Ecuador and Belarus, the social orientation of their economies, mutual trade, public policies, also about the cooperation developed in this certain period of time 2007-2016, and further cooperation between these two countries, which have shown the opportunities to achieve good results relating to their foreign affairs.

On the other hand, it is very important to understand mainly as the central objective to understand how two countries with economies under development might cooperate each other in sharing experiences about different policies, and of course, creating the best ways to become partners in the international trade.

Ecuador and Belarus have already developed mutual diplomatic relations, however, the cooperation has not had any considerable approach to achieve valuable results in any sphere, which we will analyze during the development of this work, the facts which have affected or some ideas regarding to increasing their partnership.

Moreover, it is important to have a quick overview about each country in different fields and also, through some specific period of time, 2007 – 2017, to analyze mainly why was the most important period to strengthen the diplomatic and commercial relations between both countries. As result we ought to propose some ideas about the relations have not developed so far, and how important or substantive could be creating some lines of cooperation, with traditional products like those which nowadays are been imported and exported from double way, and those new fields which each country has developed until now.

The Republic of Ecuador, is the second smallest country in South America, well-known around the world for its ideal and suitable location in the middle of world, which provides many benefits for the weather along the whole year, and great environment to develop agricultural products, an incredible sea industry, and some more areas which we will discover along this research. Considering the ideal location of Ecuador geographically speaking, it is a strategic partner in this side of world.

The Republic of Belarus, is located in the hearth of Europe which makes it an powerful partner around the world, to connect east and west Europe, but not only this continent itself, also Belarus becomes a great partner to reach the Asian markets. The openness of its foreign policy has showed the importance of the international cooperation in terms of new markets; specifically, the interest of Belarus to create links of cooperation with Latin-American region.

This research work will look for understanding and analyzing the cooperation and trade between Ecuador and Belarus, and conclude answering the main question as main objective of this project, if there are sufficient and effective prospects for further cooperation between both countries. In this purpose, a descriptive methodology will be used to comprehend the mutual cooperation, considering as case of study the period of time 2007-2016.